Culture is widely acknowledged as the greatest roots reggae harmony group of all time; they made acclaimed records and toured widely for thirty years until lead singer Joseph Hill's untimely passing last year.

"Two Sevens Clash" is hailed as one of the greatest, most influential records ever made; the title track's predictions brought the city of Kingston, Jamaica to a standstill on the fateful date of July 7, 1977, the date when "7's" would fully clash. The album was an important influence on a whole generation of punk rockers including The Clash and The Sex Pistols.

Culture's debut album, which was named by Rolling Stone Magazine as one of "The Fifty Coolest Albums Of All Time" and listed as #14 on Mojo Magazine's list of "The Fifty Greatest Reggae Albums Of All Time."
